CITY IN BRIEF.

A horse and wagon were stolen from August Grande last evening.
 Bowen, Merrill & Co. have received the long expected revision of the Old Testament Scriptures.

An all-day entertainment will be given today by the ladies of the German Orphan Home for the benefit of the institution.

Dinner to-day at 37 South Meridian street by the ladies of Central Christian Church from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. Strawberries, ice cream and cake till 5 p. m. Give them a call.

The ladies of Fletcher Place Church will hold a fancy fair and ice cream festival to-morrow and Wednesday evenings. Lunch will be served on each evening from 6 to 7 o'clock.

A crazy woman by the name of Parker, who lives with relatives on Agnes street, was preparing to jump into the river from the Michigan street bridge yesterday afternoon, but bystanders prevented her.

Rev. Joseph Reynor will be tried to-morrow for performing the Patton-Davis marriage ceremony, the groom being colored and the bride white, and which is said to be against the peace and dignity of the State of Indiana.

Ed Graham, a Pan-Handle freight conductor, who resides in this city, was arrested at Urbana, O., one day last week on a charge of shooting a tramp. Investigation resulted in his release shortly after he had been locked up, it being found that there was nothing in the charge.

Yesterday's Storm.

Between 4 and 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon the city was visited by a "nervy" little wind storm, accompanied by heavy rain, but it lasted only about thirty minutes. The boughs were twisted in all kinds of fantastic shapes, and here and there an awning was loosened from its position and thrown to the ground, but the damage was not serious in any part of the city. The first visitation of rain did not reach farther north than North street, but the shower that followed a little after 5 o'clock was more general. Another heavy wind and rain prevailed last night, and though the outlook for a "regular" was remarkably good for a time it soon dwindled down to a calm, and was raining steadily at an early hour this morning.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

sermon of Rev. Dr. Jeffery at the First Baptist Church Yesterday.

The George H. Thomas Post attended the First Baptist Church yesterday morning in a body, accompanied by a squad of the sons of veterans, who occupied front seats. The central portion of the body of the church was reserved for the Post, the regular occupants taking back and side pews and the gallery, completely filling the spacious auditorium. The pulpit was tastefully decorated by the ladies of the church. The principal piece was a mammoth monogram, G. A. R., in red, white and blue flowers. Under this was suspended the insignia of the order, a large floral star supported by a silk flag. The music was in charge of W. C. Smock by the regular choir. The sermon was listened to with close attention, the boys frequently applauding heartily when the patriotic sentiments expressed by the minister called for a response. The points of the sermon were sharp and decisive, and show the Doctor to be in full sympathy with the Union sentiment of twenty years ago.

The minister took his text from II. Timothy, iv. 7: "I have fought a good fight," and said that this was the language of Paul near the close of his earthly career. The speaker argued that the facts which made up the history of Paul's life work justified the estimate which he placed upon it, but the records of many will not warrant such a eulogium. Applying the text in the first instance as an epitome of the late war, the speaker declared there are "three considerations which may be appropriately expressed in the language of the text: You fought for a good cause; you fought for it well; your efforts were crowned with success. The first element that made the contest a good fight was the goodness of the cause." Continuing, he said: "But you did more than save the grand old ship. You righted some of her gear. Despite the many excellencies of our Constitution, in one respect it never was worked smoothly. There were constantly recurring disputes about the relations of the several States to the General Government; an uneasy feeling was abroad, some contending that the right of the States were being invaded by the general government, and others saying that the general government was being embarrassed by the usurpations of the States. Sooner or later, on one pretense or another, the settlement of this question must have been referred to the arbitration of war. The issue has been met; it has been settled for all time. And happily, too, has the settlement been made. No single right of a State has been impaired; yet the unity of all the States in the General Government has been secured. We now understand that the United States is not a congeries of nations, but is itself a Nation, and that the States are only to many divisions of our one territory for the better development of our common resources and the better culture of the elements of our efficiency and enterprise. The United States are not a they, but an it. Formerly an American would record his name, for example, as J. F. V., a citizen of Virginia; and now he adds to it: Brother Jonathan, a citizen of the United States.

"Moreover, you have, in saving the ship of state, preserved all of her cargo. You have not been compelled to throw overboard a single institution that belongs to the rights of our free institutions. True, there was one article on board that was not down on the bill of lading. It had been smuggled on board. Human slavery was utterly incongruous in a nation whose charter declared all men created free and equal, and which stood forth to the world as the champion of human liberty. You did not, and would not, and you ought not to have interfered with the internal economy for the sake of destroying within its borders the institution of slavery. Yet, when you found that to save the life of the Nation you must abolish slavery, you did not hesitate to destroy the rat and save the ship. And already the South are thanking you for the deliverance. You have opened up the broad and fertile regions of the South to the competition of free labor; you have proven the fraternal spirit that animated you, and to-day the South and the North are grasping hands like a band of brothers around the altar of our common country, and they are vying with you in proclaiming as the motto of the Nation: 'The Union, one and inseparable, now and forever.'"

The speaker closed with calling the attention of his auditors to the last great fight which every man must make, and exhorted them to so live that victory would be theirs.

A CLOSE CALL.

Fred Gessler and Wife Narrowly Escape Death From a Belt Engine.

While en route to this city yesterday morning from their home in Palestine, this county, Fred Gessler and wife met with an accident which resulted in a painful injury to the latter. They had reached the Belt crossing on the National road and were engaged in conversation, when, suddenly recollecting himself, Mr. Gessler looked up and saw an engine on the track nearly upon the buggy in which he and his wife were riding. As the engine was running only a rate of eight miles an hour, Mr. Gessler could have passed the crossing in safety, but, becoming confused, he stopped the horse and attempted to back from the crossing. At this moment the engine came upon them, striking the buggy and carrying it a distance of 125 feet before dumping it upon the side of the track, where it was demolished and the occupants thrown out. Mrs. Gessler was badly bruised about the face and body, a gash being cut in her forehead, her lip cut and her right shoulder broken. Mr. Gessler received some minor bruises, but was not so badly hurt as to prevent him from attending to his injured wife. Conductor McGriff and a brakeman were upon the pilot of the engine, and the former was so badly bruised by the collision that he had to leave off his day's work. The force of the collision detached the buggy from the horse, and the animal escaped without injury. Mrs. Gessler was removed by Flanner & Hommon's ambulance to the residence of a friend near the city, where she received all needed attention. In speaking of the accident, Mr. Gessler said that he and his wife were engaged in conversation and did not think where they were till he happened to look up and see the engine almost upon them. While Mrs. Gessler's injuries are very painful they are not regarded necessarily dangerous.

Mrs. J. E. Cobb rendered a solo appropriate to the day at Christ Church yesterday morning in a manner highly complimentary to herself and satisfactory to the large congregation assembled.

WHO ARE THEY?

What Business Had They There at Such a Time?

And Numerous Other Questions Which Will be Suggested by Reading the Text.

The Columbus (O.) Sunday Capital contains the following story, which may prove of interest to certain denizens of Indiana's capital city:

Here is a story illustrating the supreme idiosyncrasy of women who imagine that they, at least, may indulge in questionable amusements without being found out, no matter how other female fools may be picked up. A Capital reporter was riding on a High street car last Monday night, on his way up town. It was late, about 11 o'clock—about the time, in fact, that the night train comes in from Indianapolis. He observed among the people who had just come in on the train, two couples, apparently having a picnic of their own, without caring much for expense. Their actions excited a suspicion in his mind that things were not exactly in accordance with the requirements of strict morality, and as a consequence, he became more observant. As the car proceeded on its southward journey he became satisfied that, whatever might be their relations, the strange men were not the husbands of the strange women, though seemingly on very intimate terms.

The women were both young, good looking and well dressed. To the men the reporter did not pay so much attention, but he saw among the passengers a gentleman who, he thought, might tell him something, and as his curiosity was by this time quite wrought up, he inquired of this gentleman if he knew the parties.

"Well, yes," was the reply.
 "Who are they and where are they from?"
 "They are from Indianapolis. The men are not the husbands of the women, but the women are married all the same."
 "Ah! I see. Out having fun with the boys?"

"Exactly—married women out on a lark! That's just it."

The reporter pushed his investigations no further, but dropped off at Town street, leaving the festive hostess ladies and their companions on the car.

A day or so afterward the reporter met his friend and incidentally referred to the merry episode of Monday night, remarking that he would like to know where they went.
 "They went," said the know-no one, "to Morand street, where they got off and crossed over to Third. They went down Third to Broad, and in Broad to the Gardner House, where they applied for rooms, but the hotel was full, and they passed on to a hotel on High street, where they staid the remainder of the night, going back to Indianapolis Tuesday morning."

"And the women, I suppose, had some plausible lie to tell their husbands as to where they had spent the night?"
 "Of course."

On Friday morning, as a matter of curiosity, the reporter went to the hotel and examined the register on Monday. There were but two double entries—that is to say, "John Doe and wife," "Richard Roe and wife"—only these were not the names—some registered from Legansport and the other from Greencastle. Both entries were made by the same hand. The reporter has the names, but does not propose to give them. They are probably fictitious any way.

This should meet the eyes of either of the festive parties, they may be induced to reflect that larks like these are sure to be found out sooner or later; and, thus reflecting, break off from their evil ways.

These women ought to know that discovery means for them nothing less than social damnation in this life, even if they have no fear of the more terrible punishment that awaits them in the next, whether detected or not.

What Indianapolis wives were missing from home Monday night?

A High Old Time.

About dusk last evening Harry Green and William Gaskell, teamsters, made an attack on Philip Williams, colored, also a teamster, and used him up badly. The trouble occurred in a stable on West North street, and Gaskell came at Williams with a knife, which the latter knocked out of his hand. Williams then seized a stick of wood and dealt his adversary a heavy blow on the back of the head, inflicting a deep and rather dangerous cut. Both of the men then sprang upon Williams and were thumping him hard, when a man by the name of George Keers came to his assistance, and a general fight was the result. Patrolmen Walker and Fickel arrested the entire party. Williams and Keers gave bail.

SOUVENIRS OF ISLAM.

ISKENDER BEY, of Constantinople, Turkey, would respectfully inform the ladies of Indianapolis and vicinity that, THIS AFTER-NOON, he will open his exhibit of Oriental fabrics at the Carpet House of Albert Gall. This exhibit will embrace many rich, rare and beautiful relics of Turkey and Persia, including over TWO HUNDRED RUGS and THREE HUNDRED SPECIMENS OF EMBROIDERIES, PORTIERES, etc. These fabrics are seldom seen outside the bazaars of the Orient, and certainly no such exhibit is likely to ever again be seen in this city. Iskender Bey will be here only ten days, and in order to speedily dispose of these fabrics will make the prices thereon exceedingly reasonable.

Those who admire the novel, the beautiful, the artistic, the picturesque, can not afford to forego themselves the pleasure of looking at these Souvenirs of the lands of the Sultan and the Shah.

THE GREATEST CUT IN WALL PAPERS THAT HAS EVER BEEN MADE IN THIS CITY.

There is nothing so misleading as quotations as they usually appear in a newspaper. How often one sees prices published to meet with disappointment when they compare the goods with the alleged bargains offered, or on going to avail yourself of a quotation to be told "we are just out," and have the adroit salesman try to sell you something else in the place of the vaunted bargain.

I SHALL PUBLISH NO PRICES ON THIS OCCASION. All I ask is for you to come and see the BEST, BRIGHTEST, FRESHEST, MOST BEAUTIFUL, MOST VARIED ASSORTMENT of Wall Papers ever shown in Indianapolis, at THE LOWEST and certainly the MOST SATISFACTORY PRICES AT WHICH SUCH GOODS CAN BE OFFERED.
